CONTENTS

Being in Aotearoa New Zealand
Academic approaches to reconciliation, representation and Indigeneity
Brigitte Bönisch-Brednich and Graeme Whimp ........................................................... 7

ENGAGED SCHOLARSHIP AND TREATY CLAIMS

New Zealand’s Treaty of Waitangi reconciliation processes
A Māori Treaty educator’s perspective
Peter Adds .................................................................................................................. 19

Ki wīwī, ki wāwā: Normalising the Māori language
Rawinia Higgins ....................................................................................................... 25

Recognising Māori legal traditions in reconciliation
Issues of theory and research methodology
Carwyn Jones ......................................................................................................... 39

Intergenerational investments or selling ancestors?
Māori perspectives of privatising New Zealand electricity-generating assets
Marama Muru-Lanning .......................................................................................... 49

REFLECTING ON NEGOTIATIONS

Settling historical Māori claims under the Treaty of Waitangi
An assessment of the first twenty-five years, 1989–2014
Richard S. Hill ....................................................................................................... 65

Reconciliation and resolution
The Office of Treaty Settlements and the Treaty of Waitangi claims process in Aotearoa New Zealand
Therese Crocker ................................................................................................... 81

Negotiations for reconciliation
How they can exacerbate division as well as promote reconciliation
Richard Boast ......................................................................................................... 95

Waikato-Tainui and Ngāi Tahu’s Treaty-settlement negotiations with the Crown
Martin Fisher ........................................................................................................... 111
REFLECTING ON MODES OF ENGAGEMENT

Forty years on
A personal view of the history of the Waitangi Tribunal, 1975–2015
Barry Rigby .................................................................................................................. 129

Mock fighting and performed reconciliation
Some examples from Māori and Tahitian custom
Alex Frame and Paul Meredith ................................................................................ 137

Mana whenua and the ownership of nature
Challenges to the co-governance of natural resources in Aotearoa New Zealand
Tanja Rother .............................................................................................................. 151

Pōwhiri for the ancestors
Representation of Indigeneity and reconciliation in a Māori ritual
Andrea Blätter and Tanja Schubert-McArthur ..................................................... 167

Two peoples?
Demographic changes from first contact to the 21st century
Robert Didham and Paul Callister .......................................................................... 183

The Treaty of Waitangi
Te Tiriti o Waitangi .................................................................................................. 203

Biographical notes ................................................................................................... 207

Glossary ...................................................................................................................... 211

Index ........................................................................................................................ 215